A Message from Fr. Tom Donovan:

Most people associate the required adherence to a strong moral code as an essential part of “religion”. Indeed, the word “re-lig-ion” comes from the same root from which we get the English words ruler, meaning a ‘standard’, and even lig-ament and lig-ature and lig-ation which has the sense of ‘connecting’, ‘constraint’ or ‘binding’. When asked why parents make the sacrifice to send their kids to Catholic Schools, very frequently I will hear something like, “I want my children to grow up with the values. I want them to grow to be ‘good people’.” Christianity looks like something, and that something is what they want for their children.

Really, any skill or trait we admire “looks” like something... a pianist effortlessly runs up and down the keyboard playing scales and arpeggios, a baseball player concentrates while at bat, perfecting his swing to hit the ball and score runs, an expert craftsman spends years apprenticed to a master, practicing the craft and becoming proficient in its techniques, a physician has undergone an immense regimen of education, clinical training, review and supervision in order to hold such important professional responsibility.

In order to attain the skills and the attitudes that we admire, we bind ourselves to the lessons and the practices which are set before us, that we might be molded into practitioners of that expertise. When learning ‘the way’ of music or sport or a profession, individual expression and creativity are less valued than actual mastery of the discipline with consistency, good judgment, and reliability. Usually one must have the humility as a learner to ‘bind’ one’s self to ‘the way’ and master it competently, inside and out, before personal ‘flair’ can be developed enough to contribute meaningful novelty and individuality to the practice of a profession.

And so, as Christians, how do we approach the Law? What do we want the Law to teach us and our children? We expect our laws and their enforcement to exemplify ‘justice’ and lead to a greater peace among members of our society. As the first step, we are concerned as to where the ‘lines’ are... “...is it a sin if... “ ... so that we do not break the demands of the Law. Jesus would teach that keeping the Law in this way is of importance, but he doesn’t want us to stop there. Not only does Law protect justice and peace in society by ordering our behavior, but it also forms us to be able to embrace new situations with wisdom, confidence, and grace. Keeping the letter of the Law is a challenge in itself, but what happens when the Law is ambiguous... or silent? We know that it against the Law of God to kill our neighbor, but what do with think about the death penalty? ... of war? ... of premarital relations? ... of opportunities available to us by way of medical science?

Jesus certainly didn’t say anything about stem cell research or nuclear war in the bible, but he did give us principles to live by which can be discerned by those who give themselves wholeheartedly to what the spirit of the Law has to teach. Jesus was an observant Jew for the most part. He honored and respected the Law which brought together Israel as God’s Holy People. But he also challenged the Law when its observance became an end to itself... an external observance lacking the ability to change hearts. One might come to learn through Jesus that religion (as simple rule-following) is not what makes people good or righteous, rather it is growth and participation in the life of God that perfects the moral human person. How do we do that? How do we obtain that “something” that Christianity has to offer? We ‘bind’ ourselves to the practice of the faith and let it transform us on its own terms, letting it shape our very being and identity.

A Message from Mrs. Carol Frericks—Principal

Catholic Schools Week 2023: Works of Mercy in Action

On Monday, January 30, St. Dominic School celebrated Works of Mercy in Action in Our Community Day. We started our day with a Works of Mercy Prayer Service. Then, each class performed Works of Mercy through community service field trips at Good Samaritan Home, Humane Society, Catholic Charities, Horizons Soup Kitchen and Food Pantry, or Quanada. All week, each class will collect nonperishable food for the Souper Bowl of Caring Drive at Catholic Charities. We are all enjoying the Corporal Works of Mercy!
