One of the traits that distinguish Catholics from other Christians is the Catholic Church's solicitude and outreach for those who are sick. Not that other Christian groups do not care for and pray for the sick, but as Catholics we have a long history of building hospitals and other health care institutions and of training and providing healthcare professionals for not only the most advanced hospitals in the world, but for the poorest of the poor in our missions. We generously make the Sacrament of the Sick and the other sacraments to those who are ill and especially the dying. We have a uniquely well-developed theological and anthropological understanding of the problem of human suffering, which is articulated by our great Pope-philosophers and theologians such as St. Pope John Paul II in his letter Salvifici dolores (On salvific suffering...) and by the parish priest who stands at bedside simply holding the hand of a nursing home patient who is afraid to die, and also by the deacon who presides over funeral and burial services.

Anyone who has spent time working in our parish offices or at Catholic Charities, either in the food bank or in the counselling centers, anyone who works for one of our many hospitals finds quickly that the poor and the needy and the sick and the desperate have needs that might overwhelm even the strongest and most faithful souls, if not fortified by the grace which only God can give through prayer, sacrifice, mercy, and hope.

Our readings this week show Jesus leading the way. He first heals Simon's mother, and then many of the village bring their sick and possessed to Jesus, who restores each to health. However, what takes place after this exciting day of healing and restoration is also intended to teach us about the mission of the Messiah. After healing and exorcising demons—dismissing bodily and spiritual evils—he goes out into a deserted place to pray. There were still more that needed healing; there were still people calling out his name. But the priority of that next day was prayer and restoration that he could continue the mission elsewhere. I don't think that the healing power of Jesus had been exhausted or was being arbitrarily limited for some reason as he goes out into the desert, but I do think that Jesus recognized that if his healing ministry were disconnected from the mission of his Father and his healing works were seen apart of that Kingdom, it would all be in vain. And so his mission is not only one of great healing action, but also one of internal intimacy with the Father... the two go together and we can only understand healing with the imperative of prayer and intimacy with the Father.

In addition to reading this week's Gospel and encountering Job's and Paul's experiences of suffering, this week we observe a Day of Prayer for the Sick. This day was established by John Paul II to coincide with the feast day of Our Lady under the title Our Lady of Lourdes. Coincident with the apparition of our Lady at Lourdes, a spring of water which has been renowned for its healing power for generations leapt up, and is a central feature of the shrine at Lourdes. People from all over the world and all walks of life come to this once-lazy French village to pray to God for healing and strength and deliverance from evil in all of its forms... and God's grace has flown through the waters in that place of profound prayer.

The mission of Jesus was to remind us that we are more than a sum of our failures, our illnesses, or even our sins, even though our bodies bear so many marks and bruises of the evil this world heaps on us. We are not simply arthritics, diabetics, cancer patients, obese, or hopeless, any more than we need to think of ourselves as adulterers, bank robbers, gossips, or murderers. We are children of God, by God's own grace and mercy. He draws us out into the silence of our hearts, which may be for many one of the most deserted places we find in our modern age—a place where constant communication and action competes with the opportunity for divine intimacy. He brings us there not to quarantine sin or to punish sinners, but to bring them into a greater realization of our dependence on the divine force which first gives life, and then restores it when it is dulled by sin, disease, indifference, weariness, hopelessness, or loss. God knows the aches of our bodies and hearts and wishes that nobody be lost in death, but have eternal life.

In addition, our Kindergarten and First Grade classes sang songs at Sunset Home. Grade 5 students packaged and sorted goods at the Catholic Charities Pantry.
