October 20, 2024 — 29th Sunday in Ordinary Time (B)

A Message from Fr. Tom Donovan:

In just a few weeks, citizens of our nation will exercise the solemn duty of electing leadership for our government... the federal and state governments, as well as local and judicial races, as well as a variety of advisory referenda. For more than 200 years, this process has helped define who we are as a nation in the course of history, and this election is no different, considering the important issues that face us.

The Church does not make a habit of endorsing or denouncing political parties or any particular candidate running for office. The Church does urge her members to exercise their right to vote and to do so in a responsible and moral way that benefits the "Common Good". This is a deliberative faculty of the human person that guides the exercise of human free will. It is an exercise of conscience to make, ultimately, a moral decision.

Elections rely on the exercise of prospective judgement, that is, the capacity to anticipate and predict the ability of a candidate among a slate of candidates to govern effectively and justly. Nobody can predict the future, but as a judge of policy and personality, electors have a responsibility to wisely discern the candidate that best advances the needs of the "Common Good". Thus, one's responsibility is not for what one is feeling or what one's hunch is about one candidate's suitability over others, or for how one can be enriched by the enactment of policies, but out of what one can reasonably abstract as the result or consequence of voting for one candidate over another in light of the Common Good. This requires voters to be aware of the positions and the personal qualities of the candidates, and to choose out of the best interests of the community, by the guidance of a well-formed conscience. This is never a perfect process, and our candidates themselves are certainly not perfect either, but electors are asked to do their best to see through the rhetoric of campaigns and vote to promote the Common Good.

In their document, "Forming Consciences for Faithful Citizenship," the United States Bishops explain how Catholics have a moral obligation to engage in political life. As ugly as election cycles have been in recent years, it would be a sure temptation for some to distance themselves from this process altogether. Nonetheless, Catholics can and do influence the public life by taking faith-filled positions on public policy.

Of the moral issues that face us, some of the most significant are:

- . The sanctity of life (abortion, euthanasia),
- . Finding the Common Good through social justice,
- . The promotion of human rights and dignity,
- . Providing economic justice and care for the poor and vulnerable,
- . Seeking a humane and just resolution of the immigration and refugee crisis, and,
- . Discerning proper stewardship over the environment and natural resources.

There is a relative hierarchy of these issues, meaning that they are not all equal in concern and importance. Indeed, there may be conflicting interests and (good and not-so-good) opinions on how to solve the problems these issues present to us. A Catholic has the obligation to study these issues, to know what the Church teaches about these same topics and why they are important to people of faith, and then to choose candidates who can best implement good policies on each of these issues. Our responsibility is to enter the voting booth with a well-formed conscience that harmonizes with Church teaching and the rightful aspirations of citizens and all people of goodwill.

Good luck to us all as we exercise this duty to elect our leaders. May God inspire us and our elected officials to achieve greater peace and justice across our land.

Eighth Grade Class Trip to Washington D.C.—Thanks For Your Support!

The St. Dominic School 8th-grade class traveled to Washington D.C. from Sunday, October 13 through Friday, October 18 along with the 8th-grade students from St. Francis School. The students, teachers, priest, and parent chaperones all enjoyed this amazing opportunity to visit many historical locations in our nation's capital and Williamsburg, Virginia. We sincerely appreciate their teacher, Miss Glidewell and St. Anthony Parish for supporting this class trip. These students and their parents provided many service hours at school and at parish events during their 7th and 8th-grade years to make this trip possible.
