A Message from Fr. Tom Donovan:

Last week's and this week's gospel feature figures that suffer great humiliation for their sins. The 'prodigal son' realized the dishonor he called upon himself for the shameful way he had treated his father and squandered his inheritance, eventually deciding to return to the father, no matter the consequences. The woman caught in the very act of adultery was placed before Jesus, perhaps literally 'on trial for her life', before a jeering audience calling shame upon her. For most people, the prospect of being subjected to shame is not only uncomfortable for oneself, but is even hard to witness from afar. We sometimes call those experiences 'cringe' moments, where our inner hearts pity for those who are trapped in the humiliation of shame and disgrace.

Shame is a popular topic being researched and talked about in self-help and popular-psychology movements. Theologians have written about the causes and effects of shame through the centuries. The experience of disgrace and emotional turmoil arising from shame is a universal human experience.

St. Thomas Aquinas observes that shame is a passion under the sub-category of fear. Passions are not necessarily good or bad in themselves, but are emotional energies that direct us toward good (or bad) things. The shame that comes from being caught stealing from the cookie jar can lead us to repentance, which is a good thing. On the other hand, shame has the ability to lead the guilty into a sort of hopelessness, anxiety, and torpor if one hopelessly clings to the feeling, unable or unwilling to change in the face of being shown the guilt of sin. This, of course is unhealthy shame. One can experience shame as a turning point to change one's life for the better, while another can use it as a motivation for withdrawal from social circles or even for self-harm. Shame is not ultimately about the particulars of sin, whether it be swiping cookies from the cookie jar or committing adultery or murder, but it is ultimately about how we re-direct that negative energy towards some kind of good that leads to healing after disgrace.

Our contemporary culture has a love-hate relationship with shame. We hate to be cited for our own moral failures, but we love to accuse and expose others who have transgressed cultural norms. Indeed, we sometimes do this as entertainment, of all things. That's why we have bawdy afternoon talk shows showcasing every sort of perversion for an audience's judgement and mockery. This also explains the success of much of 'reality TV' and the lack of decorum in our political discourse. In these environments, a certain unhealthy 'pride' is often used to shield the offender against public criticism in an attempt to turn the negative energy in an accusing glance towards the accusers themselves, putting them to silence.

In today's gospel, Jesus encounters a woman who is caught in adultery. Her sin is on display for the whole community to see, and in a way we too are voyeurs these many centuries later! Jesus calls off the woman's accusers and proclaims forgiveness, along with a blessing and a warning, "Go, and from now on do not sin any more!" (Jn 8:11)

The Lord's words of mercy should be enough to dispel any fear from this woman's heart and help her to stand with dignity in society once again, as one who has a history, but is not allowing herself to be defined by that condemnation. Shame however, tends to have a lasting, caustic effect on the soul. This is perhaps why it is hard to go to confession. This is why it is hard for those leaving prison to re-integrate back into society. This is why suicide rates are so high in our society. This is why so many turn inward, toward their sin, 'doubling down' on their transgression rather than turning away from it... using pride to soothe the guilty heart with the lie that one's individual strength or desire or perspective is greater than the call to repentance.

The miracle of forgiveness, of course, is the absolution of sin by the mercy of God and the Blood of the Cross, but for it to be effective and transformative in our lives, forgiveness must be received deeply within the heart. There must be a healing, not only against the guilt of the sin, but also from the after-effects, sometimes called the 'attachment' we have to sin— not only the propensity we have to sin again, but the tendency to dwell in the unforgiveness caused by the after-effects of fear and shame that prevent us from receiving the fullness of God's mercy from his words of forgiveness.

A Message from Mrs. Carol Frericks—Principal

First Grade Leaders Teach About the Virtue of Justice

During the month of April, our first-grade leaders will be teaching about the Cardinal Virtue of justice. Mrs. Tera Smith, first-grade teacher, provides a lesson each day from the Catechism of the Catholic Church, the Bible, or the lives of the Saints. The Catechism of the Catholic Church defines justice as “the moral virtue that consists in the constant and firm will to give their due to God and neighbor. Justice toward God is called “the virtue of religion.” (CCC, 1807). The just man, often mentioned in the Sacred Scriptures, is distinguished by habitual right thinking and the uprightness of his conduct toward his neighbor. In Leviticus 19:15, God says, "You shall do no injustice in judgment; you shall not be partial to the poor nor defer to the great, but you are to judge your neighbor fairly." Mrs. Smith's first-grade class will help our school learn and develop helpful habits of justice at school.
