ASK FATHER
COLUMN

Q: Should we hold hands during the Our Father in Mass? Are we supposed to raise our hands during the Our Father?

A: Although there is no official prescribed posture for the hands during the Our Father, either from the Holy See nor the U.S. bishops, the holding of hands can become a problem if the entire assembly is expected or obliged to do so. There is no problem for a couple or a family to adopt this action discreetly, but such a posture should not be seen as the norm or standard by which this prayer is recited during the Mass.

While there are no directions as to the posture of the faithful, the rubrics clearly direct the priest and any concelebrants to pray the Our Father with hands extended (the orantes/orans) -- so they at least should not hold hands. As for the laity, this posture (the orantes/orans) is not an optional gesture in the English-speaking world.

St. Michael Prayer

During the convocation, Archbishop McKnight offered some guidance on celebrating the Liturgy. One of the topics was the recitation of the St. Michael Prayer at the end of Mass. Although we should have an appreciation for this prayer, it is not part of the Liturgy and care must be made that we do not confuse private devotion with public prayer- the Mass. Therefore, in adherence with the archbishops direction, the St. Michael prayer will no longer be recited at the end of Mass. I do invite folks to continue to pray this prayer at the end of the rosary, at home or at any other occasion/gathering.
Thank you for your understanding and support.

Calling all 8th-12th Graders!
